Isaiah: For When Hope Feels Elusive

Rabbi David Stern

As September begins, we come to the end of the month of Elul, and the end of the sheva d'nechemta, the seven Haftarah portions of consolation that bring us from the devastation of Tishah B'Av to the pinnacle of hope and renewal at Rosh Hashanah.

The portions all come from the Book of Isaiah, addressed to a Jewish people in Babylonian exile in the sixth century BCE—powerless, hopeless, despairing not only of return, but of survival itself. And somehow Isaiah musters the language and the vision to offer them comfort and hope.

Some years these seven weeks of Biblical passages feel remote—after all, the destructions which Tishah B'Av commemorates are a distant mythic memory, and even Isaiah's ringing statements can sometimes feel more like a pleasant prelude to apples and honey than an urgent insistence on hope in the face of despair.

Then come summers like this one: the outcry for racial justice, a paralyzed and petulant American political leadership, and of course, the ongoing devastation of the pandemic, from too many lives lost to all the collateral damage we have felt: economic insecurity, loneliness, separation from those we love, profound uncertainty in so many dimensions of our lives.

This summer, we did not have to imagine the confusion and fear of Isaiah's audience—we have plenty of our own. Hope feels scarce, even foolish. In the summer of 2020, we do not have to conjure up the doubt and despair of Biblical exiles. Doubt is right here, in our hearts and in our mouths.

So all of a sudden, Isaiah matters. All of a sudden, these seven passages of consolation are not a matter of liturgical convention, but a lifeline to hope. And the hope that Isaiah proposes is actually more gritty than pretty.

In the first of the seven portions, Isaiah tells the Israelites to clear a road in the desert, to level a highway for God in the wilderness. But once we get past the inspirational poetry, we realize that desert road-building is not exactly easy work. Isaiah's hope is not the hope of Emily Dickinson, "the thing with feathers/That perches in the soul." For the prophet, hope is a construction project. It takes exertion and sweat and smart engineering. Hope in the face of seemingly intractable political turmoil, or before the shifting sands of our own lives: health and illness, success and failure, pride and shame.

And that is why this year, Rosh Hashanah feels more important than ever. Because now more than ever, we need Rosh Hashanah's promise of renewal—the sense that the shofar heralds new possibilities for us as individuals, as families, as a society seeking new paths towards comity and decency and justice.

But remember that the shofar sound is not some sonorous trumpet voluntary. It's a ragged, jagged blast, as disruptive as it is uplifting. Because Rosh Hashanah's emphasis on renewal is a charge as well as a consolation, an insistence that we make the choices and changes that will bring renewal into our lives and into the world.

What can you renew this year? A sense of service to those beyond the four walls in which we have all spent so much of our time? A commitment to forgiveness or reconciliation because anger can be as isolating as any pandemic? A sense of compassion for self when we sometimes fall short? An openness to the cries of pain or injustice that jolt us toward discomfort and transformation?

As unusual as this Rosh Hashanah will be—services online, missing the hustle and bustle of the building and all that good hugging—we are more together now than ever. Together in our commitments to the Jewish values that lend meaning to our lives. Together in all the ways that Temple will make possible: opportunities for quiet reflection, for service and civic engagement, for blessing and song, for making your home a holy place. And as Isaiah would have it, together in hope. There is building to be done, and God has blessed us with just what we need to do it—open hands, open hearts, and each other. Shanah Tovah!

A New Year, New Ideas & A New Journey THROUGH THE SEASON

From the storm-tossed months of the past year, we arrive at a new shoreline. Regardless of the ways we've all been buffeted the past year—by tornadoes, COVID-19, isolation, racial and civic unrest, job loss or our own private struggles—Rosh Hashanah comes.

And so does the reminder that joy, hope, compassion and coming together are as much of a part of our story as the tough times. Like the shofar that stirs us to awaken the spirit, Temple Emanu-El faced an urgent challenge when the ramifications of the pandemic became clear: How to reimagine a yearly coming together when we can't be together.

Our clergy, staff, leadership and engaged membership have spent many months on creative overdrive to offer new pathways to embrace this holy season. Services are still being designed for moments of majesty and wonder as well as introspection. Music will lift our spirits in familiar and new melodies. You'll see your friends on screen and schmooze in the comfort of home. Our members will be part of the celebrations on our screens. We'll get chances to gather, safely, in person. We'll create our own sanctuaries at homes and share our own stories in the weeks and months to come.

How we miss seeing each other! Hinei mah tov—and how good it will be to dwell together as one big heart, from 2600 sofas and dining rooms and living rooms and precious souls.

ELUL: BEGINNING TO TURN

OPENING YOUR HEART WITH PSALM 27 WITH RABBI DEBRA ROBBINS

Wednesdays through October 7, 9-9:30AM, with option to chat online from 9:30-9:45AM

We're so excited to continue learning with Rabbi Robbins in this eight-week class using her book, "Opening Your Heart with Psalm 27." Consider this book as a daily invitation, beginning on the first of Elul and continuing through Simchat Torah, to engage in the sacred work of reflection during this season of turning. This year, the ancient words of the psalm speak to us even more directly about our fears, our grief, our desire for shelter, the solace that comes with song and the ongoing need for patience, courage and hope. Rabbi Robbins will facilitate the practice in a weekly session to engage with the text and our lives, using music, reading, writing and silence. We recommend you have a copy of the book, as well as a notebook or lined paper, and a pencil or pen. Materials from the printed book will also be shared electronically in each session. The weekly practice will take place live on Zoom, with an opportunity to "chat" with Rabbi Robbins after the practice. It will be recorded and available on the Temple Emanu-El Facebook page for those who prefer to practice at a different time. Watch The Weekly and tedallas.org for Zoom links to the class.

To buy your own copy of the book, contact Judaic Treasures at 469.230.5195 or judaictreasures.com; Amazon or psalm27ccarpress.org, where resources for using the book are also available

SPECIAL OUTREACH TO OLDER ADULTS

A subgroup of the Older Adults Engagement Task Force is working to increase access, engagement, connection and inclusion for our members.

In July, this group called hundreds of older adults to check in about their experiences connecting to Temple during the pandemic. The group also contacted activity professionals at the senior living communities where many of our members reside to help make Temple's programs and services available to their communities. The work is ongoing.

"During this pandemic, we are all feeling isolated" said Macki Ellenbogen, chair of the Older Adults Engagement Task Force. "Now more than ever, the time is now to ensure that our members have the ability to connect with Temple remotely to enjoy and participate in the many programs, activities and worship services, including High Holy Days, that are offered online."

If you'd like to learn more, contact Macki at ellenbogen47@gmail.com.

If you or a Temple member you know could benefit from our Older Adult outreach and support, please contact Lauren Kahn at 972.863.0611 or lkahn@tedallas.org.

Join the Dallas Holocaust and Human Rights Museum (DHHRM) for the third in a series on race and racism in our community. Temple is a partner on this series, held via Zoom, which hopes to foster an increased understanding of racism in historical and contemporary context and an awareness of concrete steps that can be taken to disrupt systemic racism. SESSION 3: THE PRESENT

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10 AT 7PM

Register for Session 3 and watch the previous sessions at dhhm.org

In this session, moderated by consultant Kamillah Collin, we will offer space for personal testimony. Centering and honoring voices of people of color, we will hear about what racism looks like in our city now, recent changes in our communities, and the work that still needs to be done.

ECEC REOPENS WITH SAFETY IN MIND

The Early Childhood Education Center is eager to welcome back children and families on September 8. The ECEC team has worked closely with Temple staff, clergy, lay leadership and medical professionals to stay safe during the pandemic.

“As we know, making choices to stay apart is a key to slowing the spread of the coronavirus/COVID-19, so we have to get very creative in making connections while apart,” says Shelly Sender, Director of Early Childhood Education.

“It is going to be more important now more than ever to find creative ways for our children, teachers and families to maintain social connection with each other, prior to school and once school has begun,” she said.

Teachers are planning lots of ways to introduce families and children to the school and their new classrooms. Other ideas include story times with grandparents, cards and letter-writing for friends in other classes, continuing the warmth of Shabbat wearing Shabbat t-shirts, weekly spirit days, and more!”

The new mantra: Let’s find ways to make social distancing less distant!

FROM OUR ARCHIVES

Who doesn't love a birthday? As Temple Emanu-El looks ahead to the 150th anniversary of its founding in 1872, we flip back to the 90th birthday celebration. You'll also notice Rhea Wolfram in the top right photo. She is still an involved member of Temple as the co-chair of the 90s and 100s cohort of the Temple Annual Fund.

The Dallas Hebrew Benevolent Association was organized in 1872. From that organization, Temple Emanu-El would be established in 1875.
